About the speakers:

Dignity Space is based in Kiev, Ukraine. The organisation has developed the training programme 'Peace Engineers', where people from different vocations are trained in nonviolence, dialogue, and peacebuilding. Peace engineer alumni use their skills in local Ukrainian communities under very difficult circumstances and continue to do so after the full-scale invasion.

OMTÆNKE-Tanken (The RETHINK-tank) The R-THINK-tank is based on principles such as "No to Armament - Yes to a Sustainable Security Policy". The RETHINK- tank abides by Olof Palme's Independent Commission on Disarmament and Security, which stated that nations and populations can only feel safe when their counterparts feel safe. Offering an alternative to a dominant discourse in favour of military superiority, the RETHINK-tank promotes a concept of "sustainable security policy".

Den Grønne Ungdomsbevægelse/DGUB (The Green Youth Movement) is a group of young climate activists fighting for a green, just future and structural changes in society such as more comprehensive climate policies and biodiversity laws. DGUB seek influence through different campaigns, demonstrations and advocacy work in order to highlight challenges and reduce damage. DGUB's work is based solely on voluntary contributions and commitment and is independent of party politics.

Mobaderoon/Abir Haj Ibrahim Established as a women-led youth and community engagement initiative in 2010, Mobaderoon has grown as a locally engaged and trusted organisation and as an inclusive movement for non-violence and for values-based learning, dialogue and action for peacebuilding for Syrians living across all areas of Syria and for those displaced within and outside Syria.

Dr. Steinar Bryn has designed and implemented several hundred dialogue meetings between people in deep conflict in the Balkans, Ukraine, and beyond. He is based at the Nansen Academy in Norway. Since 2014 he has explored whether the experience in the Balkans holds relevance for Ukraine. He has been nominated for the Nobel Peace Prize seven times.

The Danish Centre for Conflict Resolution is a non-profit and non-governmental organisation founded by Else Hammerich, a former member of the European Parliament. The expressed purpose of the centre is to spread knowledge of peaceful conflict resolution nationally as well as internationally and to ensure that individuals and organizations are qualified to deal with conflicts in a sensible manner.
